“It’s not about self-care—it’s about collective care. Collective care means shifting our organizations to be ones where people feel fine if they get sick, cry, have needs, start late because the bus broke down, move slower, ones where there’s food at meetings, people work from home—and these aren’t things we apologize for. Where we actually care for each other and don’t leave each other behind.”

Leah-Lakshmi Piepzna-Samarasinha
